AN INCORRIGIBLE BOY

THERE was a shrewd Yankee boy born up in Vermont about 50 years ago, and despite the fact that he was inside the railing under any circumushered into this busy world without he proverbial silver spoon in his mouth, Sunday school every Sunday at 9:30 I have satisfied myself that his natal star was a lucky one. Nurses in that practical section of the world are not given to mummery or prophecy, and no happened. one attempted to forecast the horoscope of the sturdy little youngster. He kicked and squalled with astounding vigor and displayed wonderful determination to have things his own way, but his father had the same disposition, and all disposed of the infant proclivities by saying that he got them from the old man direct. The boy had measles, mumps, wind colic, scarlet rash and all the other ailments with which our early existence is penalized, but they never impaired his constitution or his will.

At school, where he was enrolled as Ross Blaigh, the youngster was looked upon as a little too "stirring" to please he teacher and the directors. Indeed, the boy seemed dangerously near being incorrigible. He insisted on spelling phonetically. He contended that there was no "doggone sense" in going hrough l-a-u-g-h when l-a-f would answer the same purpose, and as long as he honored the little white schoolhouse with his presence he persisted in making U-rip spell Europe. He chafed get into a city, and vowed with all the he would never stay up there among the mountains, where it took two hills to raise a bean and where a kernel of corn could never sprout and grow up unless you rolled a stone aside to give nature at chance. Ross and his father were so much alike that any compro mise arrangement was out of the quesion, and the old gentleman, remembering his own early inclination to go his own way, fell in with the trend of the boy's aspirations, and wrote to the uncle for whom Ross had been named, and who had become a wealthy man of affairs, requesting that he find the lad an opening. Uncle was not infatuated with having a male member of his tribe to look after, for all the men of the line withn his knowledge had an assertive independence that declined to yield to to report at the first of the next month the courage of his ancestors and for duty. At the appointed time Ross was on hand, and the bucolic trademark was spattered all over him. He was tall, raw-boned, angular, freckled, a scalp wound inflicted by a stray coupand such of his garments as had not ling pin in the hands of the agent's ofbeen made by his thrifty mother were | fice boy. There was a satisfactory setthe work of a country tailor, who believed in doing all his cutting on straight lines and in leaving plenty of room for a growing boy to fill out.

Ross looked very much out of place in his uncle's resplendant parlor, and knew it before he had seen his hat and butternut overcoat carried back to the hall rack after he had tossed them into "the darndest puffed up cheer I ever see." His rough hands were a man's size, and his feet seemed to have TAZEWELL ENcarried on a highly successful rivalry in the matter of development. He did not know exactly what to do with these unruly members and could not . O. O. Now he was mad enough ander restraint, had a restless desire to to tear the depot down, but as he started to repeat the assault he faced a revolconfidence of a youth of 14 that ver that the boy had grabbed from the agent's drawer. 'The little cuss would have shot, sure,' the special fumed in telling it to me. 'I could see it in his eyes, and he had the impudence to tell me that if I didn't stop swearing he'd put me out of the depot.'

"I don't believe in punishing the boy for obeying orders," continued the president, "even if he does make a mistake on the safe side."

"Chip off the old block," said the uncle, as he rubbed his hands and set up a chuckle that broke out at intervals through the rest of the meeting. It was only a little later that Ross was brought to the attention of the directory again. Once more he had been in temporary charge during the absence of the agent, and an Italian scissors grinder who had his machine shipped from the city attempted to ictation. But blood is a good deal carry it off without paying charges. hicker than water among men of that He was a savage specimen of his class, disposition, and the boy was notified but the Green Mountain boy had all tackled the fellow. The engagement closed with the Italian on top of the machine, bleeding like a stuck beef from

By this time the boy was much talked about and the idea of giving him a more responsible position was being agitated when the uncle concluded that he wanted Ross with him in some capacity. In n brief talk Ross was informed that he had the proper stuff in him and that he would not be left at the mercy of a soulless corporation. He was taken under the uncle's wing and made office boy in the bank of which the uncle was president. Ross seemed predestined to an eventful life, for he had not been on his new duty for a week before he threw his natty cousin bodily from the outer office, jarring him physically and giving his pride one of the severest wounds it had ever received. This time it was the aunt who insisted that the boy be discharged forthwith and sent back to the farm. Then he caught the smell of burnt powder, saw a dim light through the glass partition that separated his and realized that there was something very serious requiring his attention.

It was a supreme test for an untried boy whose imagination is so liable to make a coward of him. But he came of fighting stock with lots of common sense, and was game for anything encountered in the line of duty. He realized that the bank was being burglarized and had no other thought than that of defending the property left in time without warning, just like a bank examiner. He is getting so he can his care. His cherished weapons were concealed under the bed, and in a trice he had one of them in either hand. He did not wait to make a toilet, but slipped noiselessly to the best vantage point. The outer doors of the vault had been blown from their fastenings. Two men were working vigorously on the inner doors, while their jobs fur doin' what they's ordered | a third stood by with a lantern, appar ently directing operations.

"Come on, boys," shouted Ross, as he knocked out a panel of glass with a startling racket and began pumping lehd from both revolvers. It was as effective as a regimental charge. Another found it impossible to run with a thigh bone crippled, and the third landed in the waiting arms of a policeman who was attracted to the spot by the fusillade. The whole outfit was bagged. Ross was the hero of the hour, and his uncle was so proud that he gave up the next day to the reception of interviewers who went away with the detailed history of the office boy and all his next of kin. It is easily understood how such a boy would advance. Promotion came as rapidly as he was fitted for it by business training. Confidence in his integrity and courage was unbounded. He did a great work in the matter of self-education, "filled out" to the proportions of a handsome man, as it was predicted he would, became a social favorite of that rare type that cannot be spoiled, now has one of the most delightful families in all Greater New York, and is at the head of a big financial concern in which the cousin that was bounced by the office boy is a and with good personal security. partner.-Book-Keeper.

THINNING OUT FRUIT.

Wherever It Is Done the Trees Are Almost Sure to Bear Good Crops Every Season.

The method employed in some important fruit growing districts to secure a crop of fruit, such as peaches, apples, plums, pears, etc., with uniformity every year (providing the flowers are not rendered sterile by freezing) is to systematically thin out the young fruit after danger from frost in the spring, and before the fruit gets large enough to become a tax on the tree. Fruit is seldom produced on the same spur every year; therefore, in thinning, they remove all of the fruits from one spur without injuring it, so it may produce fruit buds for the next year, allowing the next spur to bearof course, discriminating between promising and poor fruit.
